

My dear Mr. Raemaekers,

On my return to town I find your magnificent gift, with the inscription, of which I am as proud as I am of your thought of me in sending me this collection of your works.

Looking through the cartoons again I feel that you have done more to arouse English people to the real nature of the Hun than the combined efforts of all our orators and newspapers. We islanders are singularly ignorant of the character of other nations, and it has required nearly two years of your work to arouse us.

I am most grateful for the handsome gift.

Yours very sincerely,

Kathcliffe
